First Regiment Rhode Island Detached Militia.*

On the 12th day of April, 1861, rebellion against the government of the United States assumed a positive form, by the bombardment of Fort Sumter, then occupied by a single company, under the command of Major Robert Anderson, who bravely maintained his position upwards of thirty hours, when, overpowered by raging flames within the fort, and an overwhelming assaulting force, he was compelled to surrender. On the 15th of the same month, the President of the United States made a call upon the States for seventy-five thousand men, to serve three months in suppressing this outbreak of treason; and on the day following, in response to this call, an order was issued by Governor Sprague for an immediate organization of the First Regiment. Great activity prevailed in the Adjutant General's and Quartermaster General's Departments, and among our citizens generally, and in a few days the organization was completed. The Regiment proceeded to Washington in two detachments; the first, under Colonel Ambrose E. Burnside, leaving Providence April 20th, and the second, under Lieutenant-Colonel Joseph S. Pitman, on the 24th. On the 19th, the day before the embarkation of the first detachment, a beautiful national flag was presented to the Regiment by the ladies of Providence, which waved over its marching column during the campaign, and at the battle of Bull Run was perforated by eleven rebel bullets. A set of regimental colors for the Regiment was procured and forwarded by natives and citizens of Rhode Island, resident in California. They were sent to the care of Mayor Cranston, of Newport, and by him presented to Colonel Burnside, with appropriate ceremonies, at a public meeting in that city, October 29th, 1861, who in turn presented them to the members of Company F, the color company of the Regiment, for preservation as a part of its history.

Both detachments left their encampment in Providence with the warm benedictions of the immense throngs that lined the streets and crowded the wharves and shipping to witness their departure. On arriving in Washington, quarters were provided for a short time at the Patent Office, and subsequently the Regiment was established at Camp Sprague, a beautiful grove with ample parade ground, in the vicinity of the city, where the time was devoted to improvement in discipline and drill. The encampment was planned by Lient. Henry A. DeWitt, of the Engineers. The huts were built under the superintendence of Colonel William Goddard and Lieutenant William R. Walker. These accommodations added greatly to the comfort and health of the men, a point that Colonel Burnside kept constantly in view. On the 9th of June, a company of Carbineers, to act as skirmishers, consisting of seventy-three privates was organized, of which Francis W. Goddard was commissioned Captain. The other officers were Walter B. Manton, Lieutenant, and Sergeants John B. Campbell, George O. Gorton, Robert H. Deming, Louis T. Hall, and Peleg E. Bryant. They were armed with Burnside rifles, and drilled by Lieutenant Henry T. Sisson, Paymaster of the Regiment. Previous to their organization as a separate corps, they were drilled by Lieutenant Charles E. Patterson, of the 4th U. S. Infantry. James Allen, of the Light Battery, and William H. Helme, of Company C, were authorized to act as aronants in connexion with the movements of the Regiment. An accident to their two balloons frustrated their plans for aerial reconnoissances.

The interest in the Regiment, by friends at home, did not expend itself in impassioned farewells at its departure, but followed it through its entire absence, and almost daily packages and boxes were received in camp, as tokens of kindly remembrance. A cargo of ice, the gift of forty-four citizens and firms in Providence, was sent in May to the Regiment by the schooner Sea Gull, Captain Howland, Messrs. Earl Carpenter & Sons and the Providence Ice Company being among the principal contributors. The vessel arrived at Washington May 27th, and the welcome contribution was gratefully acknowledged by Colonel Burnside, in behalf of the Regiment, as was also a donation of five hundred copies of the New Testament and Psalms from the Rhode Island Bible Society, and numerous other gifts from generous friends. The enterprise was inaugurated by Mr. John Kendrick, and carried forward to its final success by the persistent labors of himself and Mr. Earl C. Potter. They with twelve other gentlemen, accompanied the vessel as a guard, and rendered efficient aid in the distribution of the cargo. They were Rev. S. W. Field, E. L. Wolcott, D. T. Downe, A. E. Bradley, E. S. Allen, J. A. Winsor, O. W. Frieze, J. A. Howland, H. S. Harris, and H. J. Smith, of Providence, P. W. Lippitt, of Woonsocket, and William Town, of Pawtucket.

The evening services at dress parade, conducted by the two chaplains, Protestant and Catholic, were highly impressive, and were frequently attended by President Lincoln and family, cabinet officers, members of the diplomatic corps, representatives and senators in congress, and other distinguished persons. The Sunday services were no less attractive and profitable; while week-day evening meetings, inaugurated mainly through the exertions of Lieutenant Prescott, contributed largely to preserve the religious habits of men surrounded by influences not always favorable to Christian thought or life.

As troops continued to arrive in Washington, and the aspect of affairs assumed an increasingly serious hue, Union forces were thrown across the Potomac, and fortifications were erected on the heights stretching from Georgetown to Alexandria. For convenience in crossing the river, new ferries were established, and old ones guarded and worked. In this duty, a detail of twenty-six men from the First Regiment, under Ensign Levi Tower, participated; and when, on the day of the funeral of Colonel Ellsworth, assassinated at Alexandria, an alarm of an engagement progressing on the Virginia side of the Potomac, was raised, the Regiment was instantly in line, ready to march on the moment of receiving orders. The alarm proved, however, to be without foundation, and quietness soon again reigned in camp.

On the 10th of June, the Regiment marched on an expedition towards Harper's Ferry, preceded the day before by the Battery attached to it, to join other forces under General Patterson, for the purpose of dislodging the rebels under General Joseph E. Johnston, then holding that place. The expedition was accompanied to Greencastle by ex-Governor Dyer, of Providence, who rendered timely and efficient service. The Regiment was here joined by Governor Sprague, accompanied by his Aide-de-Camp, Colonel John A. Gardner. It advanced to Williamsport, in the State of Maryland, but the evacuation of Harper's Ferry by General Johnston rendered the further prosecution of the campaign unnecessary, and in obedience to orders received from Washington, the Regiment returned to that city, and on the 20th June was established once more at Camp Sprague. The excessive heat and clouds of dust rendered the marching on this expedition exceedingly fatiguing, but the discomforts were borne with cheerfulness. It was on this occasion that the Regiment made a march of thirty-three miles in a single day, and "in half an hour from the time the head of the column arrived at the encampment, every straggler had found his proper place in his company bivouac."

The rebels had been gradually accumulating at Manassas, threatening Washington: and early in July, Union forces had been collected in and around the National Capital in sufficient numbers to authorize an aggressive movement. On the 16th, the army, consisting of thirty-five thousand men, with eleven batteries of artillery and four companies of cavalry, began to move. Colonel Burnside had been appointed to the command of a brigade, comprising four regiments of infantry, including the First Rhode Island, and one battery. On the 21st, the contending forces met at Bull Run, and fought the first bloody battle of the war. It was honorable to the patriotism of the First Rhode Island, that, notwithstanding but a few days of its term of service remained, officers and men marched to the field with the same alacrity that they first answered to the call of their country. The enlarged command of Colonel Burnside, and the absence of Lieutenant-Colonel Pitman on detached duty at Providence, devolved the command of the Regiment on Major Joseph P. Balch. In the order of battle, the Regiment was intended to be held as a reserve, but in the exigencies of the fight it gallantly moved to the front and dealt back with vigor the heavy blows that fell so fatally upon many of its own members. Through the entire battle, which terminated so disastrously to the Union arms, and covered with a dark cloud the bright hopes with which the whole army had been inspired, the Regiment was found promptly wherever most needed, and amidst all the panic of defeat, and the confusion of retreat, which demoralized so many of the regiments, the First Rhode Island maintained a soldierly calmness and preserved its ranks unbroken until it reached once more the camp from which it went out with buoyant spirits a few days before. In the perils of this battle Governor Sprague shared, having attached himself to Burnside's brigade as a volunteer. He was present in the thickest of the fight, and had a horse shot under him. Chaplain Augustus Woodbury, besides performing with great acceptance the duties of his sacred office, rendered active and valuable service on the field during the battle, as Aide to Colonel Burnside. Rev. Thomas Quinn, the Catholic Assistant Chaplain, was there, encouraging the men by his presence and his words. The noble Lieutenant Henry A. Prescott fell, leading on his men. Surgeon Francis L. Wheaton, having been appointed surgeon in the Second Regiment R. I. Volunteers, was succeeded by Dr. Henry W. Rivers, who, with his assistant, Dr. George W. Carr, very faithfully attended to the needs of the wounded. The record of those killed, wounded, or taken prisoners, will be found on the muster roll annexed.

The term of service having expired, and Washington being no longer considered in danger, the Regiment broke camp and left for home Thursday at midnight, July 25th, and reached Providence Sunday morning, 28th, bringing the sick and the wounded that did not fall into the hands of the enemy. It was received with military honors, and with a civic welcome that showed how deeply its patriotic services were appreciated. An ample collation was provided at Railroad Hall, and earnest, appropriate addresses were made by Hon. Samuel G. Arnold and Bishop Thomas M. Clark. The Regiment was mustered out of the service of the United States and disbanded August 2, having, by brave endurance of fatigue, hardship and peril, and by gallantry upon the battle field, gained the grateful regard of the citizens of the State. The General Assembly recognized the patriotic services of Colonel Burnside and of the Regiment, by a suitable resolution of thanks, passed at a special session held in August, 1861.

The Providence American Brass Band, which accompanied the Regiment throughout the campaign, inspiring it on the march, and assisting in caring for the wounded on the field of battle, received a public welcome in the Church of the Ministry at Large, on the 10th of August, in the presence of an audience crowding the house to its utmost capacity, at which addresses were made by Rev. Edwin M. Stone and Hon. William M. Rodman.

In closing this sketch of the First Rhode Island Regiment, it seems fitting that a brief notice of its distinguished commander should be given. Colonel AMBROSE EVERETT BURNSIDE is of Scotch descent, and was born at Liberty, Union county, Indiana, May 23d, 1824. After completing his elementary education, he entered the West Point Military Academy, and graduated with distinction, in the Artillery, in 1847. The following year, he received a full second lieutenancy, and was attached to the third regiment of artillery. The Mexican war was at this time in active operation, and soon after graduating Lieutenant Burnside joined General Scott. On the proclamation of peace, he was ordered to Fort Adams, Newport, R. I., where he remained until the spring of 1849, when he was ordered to join Bragg, in New Mexico, and received the appointment of first lieutenant in the famous battery of that officer. In the new service to which he was called, he gained reputation for coolness and bravery. In the winter of 1850-'51, he filled the office of quartermaster of the boundary commission, and in the following September, with an escort of only three men, made a perilous journey to Washington, as bearer of despatches,—an enterprise accomplished in seventeen days, for which he received the thanks of the War Department. Returning from his service in New Mexico, to Newport, he was married April 27th, 1852, to Miss Mary Bishop, of Providence. Soon after, he resigned his commission, and removed to Bristol, R. I., where he engaged in the manufacture of a breech-loading rifle of his own invention. Failing to obtain a government contract which he had reason to expect, and meeting with other embarrassments, he was compelled to give up the business entirely. In 1858 he went to Chicago, and was appointed cashier in the land department of the Illinois Central Railroad. Subsequently, he was made treasurer of the railroad company, and took up his residence in New York.

While residing in Bristol, Colonel Burnside was chosen Major General of the Rhode Island State Militia, and by his urbane manners and soldierly qualities, obtained a wide popularity, and when the Rebellion broke out, he was at once selected as the most suitable officer to lead the First Rhode Island Regiment to the defence of Washington. The call of Governor Sprague was promptly responded to. Moved by the purest patriotism, he left his business, and in an hour after receiving the despatch notifying him of his appointment, he was on his way to Providence, where he was received with the warmest enthusiasm. Immediately on his arrival at Washington, he was tendered the commission of brigadier general, which, from a sense of duty to his Regiment and the State, he declined; but afterwards, before the army advanced into Virginia, he was urged to take the command of a brigade, including the First and Second Rhode Island regiments, as already mentioned, which he did. The gallantry and military skill displayed by Colonel Burnside, as commander of the brigade, in the battle of Bull Run, attracted the attention of the general government, and August 6th, 1861, he was promoted to the rank of brigadier general. Besides the acknowledgment of his services by his adopted State, before referred to, Brown University, at its commencement in September, 1861, conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts, and the Phi Beta Kappa Society elected him an honorary member of that body.

When, in the autumn of 1861, the North Carolina expedition was projected, General Burnside was placed in command. With characteristic energy, he organized the enterprise at Annapolis, Maryland, and early in January, 1862, the expedition set sail for Roanoke Island, the stronghold of the rebels in that quarter. The weather during the voyage, was heavy, and on approaching Hatteras Inlet, the fleet encountered a furious hurricane, which threatened speedy destruction. Three vessels were stranded and one foundered; but providentially only two or three lives were lost, by the accidental swamping of a life boat. Amidst all the perils and excitement of the hour, General Burnside rose superior to circumstances, and by the promptness of his action, and calmness of his manner, imparted confidence and courage to his men. At length the victory over the elements was complete, and the Federal forces effected a landing. On the 7th and 8th of February, the battle of Roanoke Island was fought, and the rebels totally defeated, with the loss of six forts and batteries, forty cannon, upwards of two thousand prisoners of war, and three thousand stands of arms. Shortly after, Commodore Goldsborough sent a fleet of gunboats up the Pasquotauk and Chowan rivers, and Elizabeth City, Hertford, Edenton and Plymouth fell into the hands of the Union troops. On the 14th of March, Newbern was captured, after a hardly contested battle of four hours. Here, the 4th Rhode Island Regiment won laurels by a fierce bayonet charge, which decided the contest. On the 23d March, possession was taken of Morehead City. April 26th, after a bombardment of ten hours, Fort Macon surrendered, and to the 5th Rhode Island Regiment was assigned the honor of taking possession.

The successes of General Burnside were received in Rhode Island with the liveliest demonstrations of joy. The General Assembly voted him an elegant sword in testimony of the appreciation of his eminent services, which was presented to him at Newbern, June 20th, with appropriate ceremonies, in the presence of 16,000 troops. The General continued to operate in North Carolina, until the latter part of June, when, for the purpose of coöperating with General McClellan, who was about to withdraw from the Peninsula, he set out with 7,000 men for Newport News, where he was joined by a division from Hilton Head under the command of General Isaac I. Stevens, and proceeded to Fredericksburg, to take the place of General McDowell, who had been sent to the aid of Pope. After the defeat of Pope in the second battle of Bull Run, General Burnside, with his Ninth Corps, joined McClellan to drive Lee out of Maryland. He entered Frederick City, September 12th, and was enthusiastically received. On the 14th he fought the successful battle of South Mountain, and on the 17th, fought again at Antietam Bridge, beating back the enemy at every point, and crowning the day with one of the most brilliant achievements of the war. On the 7th November, General Burnside succeeded General McClellan in the command of the army of the Potomac. On the 13th December the battle of Fredericksburg took place, and though unsuccessful, "the attempt was not an error, nor the failure other than an accident."* The position of General Burnside was one of great trial and perplexity. But amidst all the vexations and disappointments to which he was subjected, he bore himself with characteristic equanimity. On the 26th January, 1863, for reasons honorable to himself, General Burnside was, at his own request, relieved from his unsought and undesired position, and was soon after assigned to the command of the Department of the Ohio. During his administration of the affairs of this Department, he arrested and tried by court martial Mr. C. C. Vallandigham, for uttering treasonable sentiments against the Government. The prisoner was found guilty and was sent across the lines to his sympathizing friends at the South. While engaged in important military operations in Tennessee, which resulted in the capture of Knoxville, Cumberland Gap, and all important points in East Tennessee, General Burnside proposed to the authorities at Washington a plan of movements substantially such as were afterwards adopted by General Sherman, and which, had they been sanctioned, would probably have precipitated the downfall of the rebellion by at least a year. During the campaign he gained the battles of Blue Spring and Campbell's Station, and resisted the siege of Knoxville. After retiring from the duties of the Department, he returned to the East.

Early in 1864, General Burnside completed the re-organization of the Ninth Corps, and joined General Grant in the final movement of the army of the Potomac towards Richmond. By a forced march, he arrived on the field on the first day of the battle of the Wilderness, in season to strengthen the General. Seeing the advantage of consolidating the 9th Corps with the Army of the Potomac, and willing to relieve General Grant from any embarrassment in relation to the command, General Burnside generously waived his rank, and subordinated himself to General Meade. On the 16th June, the 9th Corps was in position before Petersburg, and on the following day carried the enemy's works in its front. On the 18th, it participated in a still more sanguinary fight, and the line of the Corps was pushed to within one hundred yards of the rebel defences. The most marked feature of the siege was the mining of the enemy's works. The plan was proposed by Lieutenant-Colonel Henry Pleasants, of the 48th Pennsylvania regiment of volunteers, an experienced miner, approved by General Burnside, and finally authorized by General Meade. General Burnside's arrangements were judiciously made to insure success, but owing to a reversing of the programme at the last moment by General Meade, and other unavoidable causes which delayed the springing of the mine beyond the appointed time, and the want of sufficient support, after the assaulting force of the Ninth Corps had all been put in, the enterprise failed. Of course, great disappointment was felt, and by no one more keenly than by General Burnside; but he had the satisfaction, in the midst of his sorrow, of knowing that no fault justly lay at his door. A Military Court of Inquiry, composed of officers personally interested in the results of an investigation, did indeed censure him for not doing what the testimony shows to have been an impossible thing; but the Congressional Committee on the Conduct of the War, after a careful examination of the subject, exonerated him entirely from blame. They say in their report, that the disastrous result of the assault, "is mainly attributable to the fact that the plans and suggestions of the general [Burnside] who had devoted his attention for so long a time to the subject, who had carried out to a successful completion the project of mining the enemy's works, and who had carefully selected and drilled his troops for the purpose of securing whatever advantages might be attainable from the explosion of the mine, should have been so entirely disregarded by a general [Meade] who had evinced no faith in the successful prosecution of that work, had aided it by no countenance or open approval, and had assumed the entire direction and control only when it was completed, and the time had come for reaping any advantages that might be derived from it." This opinion will be endorsed by every impartial student of history.

After this unsuccessful assault, General Burnside tendered his resignation to General Grant, who refused to accept it, and gave him twenty days leave of absence, which he improved in visiting his home and friends in the East, where he received from all quarters, the most gratifying tokens of unabated confidence and esteem. In the course of the subsequent winter he repeatedly tendered his resignation to the President, who as repeatedly refused to accept it. He however did no further military duty, though his voice and influence were constantly employed in behalf of the army and the government; and April 15th, 1865, he again tendered his resignation, which was accepted. Since then he has been actively engaged in business.

No commander ever more endeared himself to his men than did General Burnside. His exact justice secured their unlimited confidence, his kindness of heart won their love. Their comfort and welfare were constantly in his thoughts, and the humblest private felt sure that his petition would not be rejected without due consideration. Unselfish and unambitious of popular applause; frank, generous, and manly in all the qualities of life; a patriot and Christian in his spirit; the years devoted to the suppression of the Rebellion, were marked by entire consecration to the interests of his country.

Second Regiment Rhode Island Volunteers.

UNDER the first call of the President of the United States for additional troops to serve three years or during the war, the Second Regiment of Rhode Island Volunteers was organized. The work of enlistment was spiritedly prosecuted under an order from Governor Sprague, and Camp Burnside was established on the Dexter Training Ground, in Providence. The command of the Regiment was given to Colonel Slocum, promoted from Major of the First Rhode Island, an officer of great personal bravery, who had gained reputation in the Mexican War. Colonel William Goddard, of the Governor's Staff, was detailed temporarily to act as Lieutenant-Colonel, who on being relieved was temporarily succeeded by General Charles T. Robbins. At the request of Colonel Slocum, Colonel Christopher Blanding assisted in drilling the Regiment. To add to the comfort of the men, a thousand rubber blankets were presented to them by the firm of A. & W. Sprague. Many other tokens of interest and regard were also received by officers and men, and the citizens of Lonsdale made a liberal donation to the hospital department. An elegant stand of colors was presented to the Regiment by the ladies of Providence, through Colonel Jabez C. Knight. The ceremonies of the occasion were appropriate and impressive. The colors were assigned to Company D, Captain Nelson Viall, who had served with honor in Mexico.

All things being in readiness, the Regiment struck their tents at 2 o'clock, P. M., June 19th, 1861, marched to Exchange Place, where, in the presence of a large crowd of spectators, a short and spirited address was delivered by Bishop Thomas M. Clark, who also invoked the Divine blessing. Resuming their march to Fox Point, they embarked on board the steamer State of Maine, and the Battery accompanying the Regiment, under Captain William H. Reynolds, on board the steamer Kill von Kull.

On the morning of June 22d, the Regiment, accompanied by Governor Sprague, Hon. John R. Bartlett, Secretary of State, and Bishop Clark, arrived in Washington, warmly welcomed, and encamped in Gales' woods near Camp Sprague. On the 25th, the First and Second regiments with their respective batteries, paid their respects to President Lincoln, by whom they were reviewed. While in camp, the Regiment was brigaded with the First Rhode Island, 71st New York, 2d New Hampshire, and the two Rhode Island batteries. In this brigade, commanded by Colonel Burnside, they marched to the battle of Bull Run, leading the column. On that sanguinary and disastrous field, it was the first, with Captain Reynolds' battery, to engage, and fought the enemy forty-five minutes without support, losing 28 men killed, 56 wounded, and 30 missing; among the former, Colonel Slocum, Major Sullivan Ballou, and Captains Levi A. Tower and Samuel J. Smith. The men stood up bravely under a heavy fire from the rebel batteries, but to no purpose. The color company was a conspicuous mark, and the regimental colors were completely riddled by balls. Dr. James Harris, Surgeon of the Regiment, was unceasing in the performance of his professional duties through the day, often exposed to danger on the field, and always having words of cheer for the wounded and dying. After the retreat commenced, he remained at his post, and gave himself up a prisoner, rather than be separated from those who so much needed his attention. The death of the brave Colonel Slocum, left the Regiment in the command of Captain Frank Wheaton, of the United States Army, then acting Lieutenant-Colonel, to the Colonelcy of which he was subsequently promoted. Captain Viall, on the fall of Major Ballou, assumed the duty of a field officer, and was afterward promoted to Major of the Regiment. Captain William H. P. Steere received the commission of Lieutenant-Colonel in the same. In retiring from the field, the Regiment preserved its order, and on returning to Washington established temporary quarters at Camp Clark. It subsequently occupied Camp Sprague, and removed thence to Camp Brightwood, where it remained till March, 1862, occupied in drilling, picket service, clearing away forests, and building fort Slocum—a worthy monument to the memory of its revered commander.

On the 26th of March, the Regiment moved with the Army of the Potomac, to enter upon the campaign of the Peninsula. During the siege of Yorktown, it was constantly employed in picket and other important duties. On the evacuation of that place by the rebels, it formed a part of Stoneman's advance in pursuit, and participated in the capture of fort Magruder, at Williamsburg, saving a regiment that had been badly cut up by unwisely drawing upon it the fire of the fort at eight hundred yards distance. It continued with the advance of Stoneman during its operations on the Pamunkey and Chickahominy rivers, was the first to take possession of White House, took part in the battles of Mechanicsville and Seven Pines, and at Turkey Bend was detached with the 7th Massachusetts, to guard Turkey Bend bridge, and remained there till Porter's corps crossed. After the battle of Malvern Hill, when the army fell back to Harrison's Landing, the Regiment was assigned to the rear as a cover. On the 5th July, it was in position on the west side of James river, opposite City Point, occupied in throwing up breastworks.

When the Army of the Potomac withdrew from the Peninsula, the Regiment proceeded to the vicinity of Yorktown, where it remained a week destroying earthworks, and August 29th it embarked for Alexandria, where it landed Sept. 1st. It shared the fortunes of Pope's Bull Run campaign, was in position at Elk Mountain on the 17th September, during the battle of Antietam, and subsequently, after performing a variety of fatiguing duties, marched with Franklin's corps, to a position in front of Fredericksburg. In the assault upon that city, December 14th, it acted with spirit and efficiency. In the preliminary movements of Franklin's corps, this Regiment was the first to cross the river, in face of a heavy body of rebel infantry and artillery, and deploying as skirmishers, drove in their pickets,—a movement executed with the coolness and precision of a regimental drill. Here, Colonel Wheaton was ordered to the command of a brigade that had been under the command of General Howe, and the command of the Regiment devolved on the gallant Colonel Nelson Viall, who received his commission on the field. This he subsequently resigned, and the temporary command of the Regiment fell to Lieutenant-Colonel Goff, an able and highly esteemed officer. He was succeeded by Colonel Horatio Rogers, Jr., transferred from the 11th R. I. Volunteers. After the battle of the 14th, Colonel (now General) Wheaton received from the Regiment the gift of a superb sword, belt and silver spurs, as a testimony of their regard for him as an officer.

In the "mud expedition," that followed this attack on Fredericksburg, the Second Rhode Island participated. It subsequently went into winter quarters, and was employed in picket duty and the usual camp routine. On the 2d and 3d of May, 1863, the battle of Chancellorsville was fought. On the morning of the 3d, the Regiment supported General Gibbon's division in carrying Salem Heights, near Fredericksburg, having two men slightly wounded. In the storming of Marye's Heights, on the afternoon of the same day, the most terrible portion of the conflict, and in some sense a separate, independent battle, the Regiment led by Colonel Rogers, performed deeds of conspicuous valor. At a critical moment, it largely contributed towards checking the enemy when our forces were being driven on the right, and saved a New Jersey regiment, hotly pressed, from annihilation and probable capture.

The battle of Gettysburg, Pa., July 1st, 2d, and 3d, next followed. In reaching this field of Union triumph, so dearly purchased, the Regiment made good time, and toward night of the second day, having marched about thirty miles, it took position on the field of battle on the extreme left, as a portion of Sedgwick's reserve. During the whole of the 3d, though not directly engaged, it was constantly moving under a storm of shells, to different parts of the field, in support of points hardy pressed, losing one man killed and three wounded, and on the following day was on picket on the further edge of the battle field. In pursuit of the retreating rebels, the Regiment had a picket skirmish at Williamsport, July 12th, in which three men were wounded.

Continuing its march back into Virginia, the Regiment made camp near Warrenton, July 25th, having marched, going and returning, nearly three hundred miles.

On the 9th of October, following the battle of Gettysburg, the rebel General Lee put his army again in motion, to turn the right flank of the forces under Meade, and make a push for Washington: but the falling back of the Federals upon Centreville and Chantilly completely checkmated his purpose. At this point, the 6th corps, including the Second Rhode Island, occupied the extreme right of the line. In the advance of the Union forces upon Rappahannock Station, November 7th, which resulted in the rout of the enemy and the capture of 1600 prisoners, the Regiment was held in reserve; and in another successful advance across the Rapidan, November 26th, it participated. A quiet winter at Brandy Station intervened, when on the 4th of May, 1864, the Army of the Potomac began the grand movement that ultimated in the capture of Richmond, and the overthrow of the rebel confederacy. The marching and fighting of the succeeding four or five weeks, to reach the Chickahominy, comprises a part of the history of the Regiment. In the Wilderness, at Spottsylvania Court House, and all along the succession of flank movements, it bore an honorable and conspicuous part, and in the sanguinary battle of Cold Harbor, a few days before its term of service expired, added another to the laurels won on other fields. On the 11th of June, the three-years' men, under the command of Colonel S. B. M. Read, returned to Providence, and on the 17th were mustered out of service. By order of Governor Smith, they were received by the Division of Militia under the command of Major General Olney Arnold, and escorted to Howard Hall, where a bountiful collation had been provided, and a formal State reception took place. Colonel Read was wounded in the head and leg, May 12th, on the third day of the battle of Spottsylvania Court House, and was promoted from Lieutenant-Colonel on the 1st June following, for gallant conduct in the battles of the campaign in which he had participated up to that date.

At the date of the mustering out of the first three years' men, companies A, B, and C, comprising recruits enlisted from time to time, conscripts, and reënlisted veterans, remained in the field before Petersburg. Wishing to preserve to the close of the war the identity of a Regiment that had served so faithfully and bravely, Governor Smith authorized a reorganization, dating from the muster out of the original Regiment. Companies D, E, F, G, and H, were recruited and sent forward, and regimental relations were once more established, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Elisha T. Rhodes, breveted Colonel April 2d, 1865, for gallant services before Petersburg.

On the 6th July, 1864, General Early, with a portion of the rebel advance, crossed the Potomac near Antietam, into Maryland, and made a raid on Washington. The Sixth Army Corps, including the Second Rhode Island, and Batteries C, D, and G, were hurried to the defence of the Capital, and reached there just in season to save the city, and to aid in driving the enemy who had approached within shelling distance, back into the valley of the Shenandoah. In the engagement at Brightwood, Md., on the night of July 12th, near its old camp ground, Sergeant Joseph M. Wood, acting Lieutenant of Company B, and private Walter Harrup, were wounded. The pursuit of the rebels was continued, first under General Wright, and then under General Sheridan, who had been appointed to the command of the Department. In the battle of Winchester, September 19th, the Regiment behaved with great gallantry, and had nine men wounded, one mortally. After this battle the Regiment was detailed as part of the garrison of Winchester, to protect it against guerrillas, as well as to escort trains to the front. It was there when the battle of Cedar Creek, Oct. 19th, was fought, and remained until December 1st, when it rejoined the Army of the Potomac, and passed the winter of 1864 and 1865 in doing siege duty in the trenches in front of Petersburg, Va. The Regiment was engaged in all the skirmishes that took place during this period, the most important of which were Hatcher's Run, December 10th, 1864; Hatcher's Run, February 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th, 1865; Fort Fisher, Va., March 25th, and Fort Stedman, same day.

In the attack on Petersburg, April 2d, 1865, the Regiment took a prominent and important part. The night before, the Sixth Corps was massed in front of Fort Fisher, ready for the assault. Just at day-break, Sunday morning, the lines advanced under a heavy fire, and carried the enemy's main lines by storm. The Second Rhode Island started in the second line, but were the first to reach the works, and planted its colors on the parapet. The enemy fled in great confusion, after their lines were pierced. Lieutenant Frank S. Halliday, acting Adjutant of the Regiment, with a small party, carried a rebel fort mounting two guns, and turned them upon the enemy. The whole affair was a glorious success, and caused the evacuation of the city on Monday morning, April 3d.

In the battle of Sailors' Creek, Thursday following the above, April 6th, the Regiment displayed great prowess. About 5 o'clock p. m., the division to which it was attached, advanced on the enemy's lines, and the Second Rhode Island attacked a part of the Naval brigade, commanded by officers of the late rebel fleet. The Regiment charged to within a few feet of their lines, when it met a severe flank fire, which forced it to retire. The action was so close that men were bayoneted, and knocked down with the butts of muskets. In the confusion, the colors of the Regiment were captured, but were quickly re-taken. The place where it charged was swampy, with water at least three feet deep, but the men pushed gallantly forward, and regained all the ground lost, causing the enemy to flee in great confusion, who left a part of their wagons in Federal hands. The loss was severe in officers and men, but there was a proud satisfaction in knowing that the efforts of the Regiment hastened the surrender of Lee and his army. Captain Charles W. Gleason and Lieutenant William H. Perry, both gallant officers, were killed. They were loved and respected by the Regiment. They entered the service as enlisted men at the beginning of the war, and by merit rose to their positions as officers. In this battle the conduct of officers and men was in the highest degree commendable. The new men, who went into action for the first time, fought like veterans.

After the fall of Richmond, and the surrender of the rebel Northern Army, under Lee, the Regiment left that city for Washington, D. C., May 24th, was mustered out of the United States service at Hall's Hill, Va., July 13th, and left for Providence on the 15th. It reached its destination by the train from New York, at 12 o'clock midnight, July 17th, accompanied by the 11th and 58th Massachusetts regiments, bound to Readville. The Regiment was received with the cheers of waiting friends, the salute of the Marine Artillery, and the presented arms of Company A, Pawtucket Light Guard, Captain M'Cloy. After the reception, they formed and were escorted to Washington Hall, where they partook of an ample collation, prepared by L. H. Humphreys, under the direction of Captain Henrie Crandall. The Regiment had often been severely depleted by sickness, and by losses upon the battle field. After the battle of Malvern Hill in 1862, it could number only 250 effective men. It numbered on its return, 345 officers and men. Under general orders from the War Department, General Meade directed, March 7, 1865, the names of the following battles in which the Regiment had borne a meritorious part, to be inscribed upon its colors, viz.:

First Bull Run,	Marye's Heights,	Spottsylvania,
Yorktown,	Salem Heights,	Coal Harbor,
Williamsburg,	Gettysburg,	Petersburg,
Malvern Hill,	Rappahannock Station,	Fort Stevens,
Antietam,	Wilderness,	Opequan,
Fredericksburg,

The author of "Rhode Island in the Rebellion" says: "It is a remarkable fact in the history of this Regiment, that from the first battle of Bull Run to that of Chancellorsville, it has met the same rebel regiments on picket, and been opposed to the same on the field. So frequently had they met that many of the men, on both sides, formed a familiar acquaintance. On the first picket service after a hard battle, the secesh would inquire, with apparent interest, after Federals not present. The scrupulous regard paid by the Second Rhode Island to the order against picket firing, secured the respect and entire confidence of these opponents, and when the former took their posts, the latter would leave their rifle pits to which they had resorted for cover, stack arms, and enter into friendly conversation. From the beginning, the Regiment has supported an honorable reputation for respecting private property in proximity to its encampments. The amount of hard labor it has performed has not been surpassed by any other regiment in the army of the Potomac; but whether intrenching, clearing away forests, marching or fighting, it has maintained a uniform character for bravery and efficiency."*
